Frank Wollweber Often Aided Meyers in His Work - The Policeman Declares He Did Not Mean to Do Any Injury.

Some time ago Policeman Thomas R. Meyers was brought to the Oak Street Station because of his good record of fifteen years, and the station house post was assigned to him, with the injunction that the dignity of the precinct depended on his stopping the petty robberies within sight of the sergeant's desk. Meyers was ambitious, and enlisted a number of boys and men of the neighborhood to help him

One of these was Frank Wollweber, the venteen-year-old son of Leonard Wollber, a barber, just across Oak street om the station house. Young Wollweber ten gave Meyers tips about the bad ys in the neighborhood, and his reward as the close friendship of the officer.

Yesterday morning the policeman saw ennis Dung's saloon, at the corner of posite directions through the tangle of reets they knew well. Meyers chased ne of them down Oak street past the

THE BULL-NECKED MAN WHO WANTED TO EVEN UP THINGS A LITTLE.

He looked like a cross between a deep-water sallor and a prize fighter.

He took off his hat and made an awkward attempt at a bow. "My name is"-but I wont tell what his name was. It was a good New England name, and one well known from Maine to Massachusetts. "I want to know about this here republic," said the bull-necked man. "Do boys earn to be honest and shipshape there?"

It took quite a while to tell him about the republic. He had a great many shrewd, matter-of-fact questions to ask about the money up there, and the form of government, and the work. When he had heard it he said: "You see, it's this way: I'm a sallor. My wife, she was delicate. She run away from home, down Barnegat way, to marry me. Father was mean, and vouldn't let her get married, nor stay to home in peace, either. So one day I just ANOTHER DEMOLISHED AN OFFICE. went and fetched her, when he was out fishing and we got married.

"After we got up here to New York we had bad times. I couldn't get a ship, an' I took to longshore work. Couldn't always get that. My wife she kind of pined The Third Taught a Three Hundred-Pound away, and I didn't do just as I ought to all the time; got down-hearted and used to take a little something to cheer me up, and things got pretty squally.

"One night I come home; no work on the docks; not a cent in the house, and found my wife sitting talking to her brother-boy 'bout eleven; run away from home. The old man licked him, and so he walked all the way to us.

"Well, I was mad. I know I ought to been thrashed, but I told the boy I had all I could do without a great lubber of a kid around, and my wife she cried, and

"Please, Mr. Policeman, come with me!
My mamma is killing my papa!"
Butler summoned Sergeant Cabill, and the two accompanied the little girl to a tenement house at No. 512 West Thirty-eighth

I told the bull-necked man the same story I'm telling all day long to widows, and to grow up like his safety. Now, if I could git him into that republic of yours he'd grow up right. I'm willing to pay. I'll pay $2 a week. Will you take him?"

The republic is too small. There are all the boys there now that can be accom-puglilst on the floor, with bls wife standing modated. We are trying to raise money so that more boys can go. The man's face fell.

What do you think he did? Complain, argue? Not at all. He put his great fist into his pocket and brought out a worn buckskin bag tied with leather thongs. He untied the thongs and took out two bright silver dollars. "There," he said. "There you are! I'll do my share toward getting that place

When she saw the officers Mrs. Cassidy rendy for a lot of new citizens. I kinder want to 'even up' a little if I can." "And your boy-your brother?"
